> A fire, the most terribly destructive which Fremember to have heard of in Osaka so far as loss of life is concerned, broke out about a marter to nine o'clock on Saturday night last. It commenced in the green room of one of the great theatres in the Dotombori, and was caused by one of the attendants letting fall or knocking down a kerosene lamp I am told that all the theatres are now with this, in the hands of careless Asiatics. most dangerous fluid). The place was at once in a blaze, but instead of endeavouring to smother the flames with some of the sil robes near at hand, water was used, which, as we well know, but most Japanese do not was worse than useless, and the flames quickly spread over the combustible building. There was a performance going on in the theatre at the time, and a large audience assembled. As soon as the cry of fire was raised a panio seized the people, and ensued a scene which must have been terriale. The doorways, as is so often the case in such places much nearer home, were far narrow, and as a matter of course, of crowds of terrifled strugglers, the weaker went to the wall and were trodden under Before all could get out, it is said, the roof fell in. How many were burnt and how many crushed to death I have not yet been able to learn, not having had time visit the spot. Some say five, same twenty, but as you well know, the truth difficult to be got at in all such cases as this. Another theatre in the some street caught fire and was burnt to the ground but the audience having had timely notice, succeeded in making their escape. During the fire in the first theatre one poor woman gave birth to a child, it is said, but whether she escaped with her life or not I could not hear.
